- i) Program: clearly separate identifiable radio or television program (including episodes of series) or a clearly identified and unedited part thereof.
- j) Skip: ability provided through whatever technical means, for a user upon request and at the time chosen by him, to advance or retreat to a particular point of the program.
- k) Streaming: transmit a program from a server, via the Internet and/or mobile networks, that is substantially contemporaneous with the rendering of the phonogram using a technology that prevents that the reproduction of the phonogram would be usable after the cessation of the transmission, except for the transitory reproduction required to render such transmission, for instance, a data buffering.

2 | Activities covered.

This contract allows to license on a non-exclusive basis the entities to offer phonograms incorporated in certain of their programs via the Internet or mobile networks, whether they are the offering of a preview or a catch-up, provided that they comply with the following requirements:

- a) The programs shall be offered from a server owned or controlled by the entity, accessed only through the publicly accessible website or application.
- b)) The recipient of the service shall have to agree, in advance of receiving the offering of the program, to only use it for their own personal non-commercial use.
- c) The program shall not contain any "back to back" music, however one time occurrence of no more than three songs in a row within one program is allowed.

- d) The signature of podcasting contracts regarding programs that highlight or focus on a single artist or group, or on several artists or groups, or on one or several music genres, such as chart shows, artist documentaries, etc. for instance, require prior consent from the record company RIGHTS HOLDER of the phonograms used in the program;
- e) The entity shall need to have previously signed a dubbing contract for the initial incorporation of phonograms into the programs offered under this agreement, as well as a public communication contract for the broadcast of the program;
- f) For the avoidance of doubt, AGEDI may only sign podcasting contracts with entities that hold a valid contract for the broadcasting of phonograms included in the programs. Accordingly, services that do not broadcast the programs they offer shall not possibly sign podcasting contracts;
- g) The offering of programs shall not be done in order to sell, advertise or promote particular services or products different from phonograms. However, the association of a program with a commercial brand under a sponsorship agreement is allowed, provided that the program does not bear the name of the sponsor and that no reference is made, either audibly or visually, to the sponsor when the phonogram is playing;
- h) The entity shall not broadcast phonograms alone or as part of a service that offers broadcasts of visual images, in a way that could lead to confusion, or mislead, in respect of an alliance or association of the RIGHTS HOLDER with the operator, or with particular services or products advertised by the operator; it shall not do it either in a way that could lead to confusion or mislead, in respect of the sponsorship or approval by the RIGHTS HOLDER or the artist of the activities of the operator, except for what refers to the phonogram's broadcast itself.

For the avoidance of doubt, the offer of programs set out here does not include any activity whereby the transmission of a particular phonogram commences upon the request of a user, or where phonograms would in any other manner be made available individually to recipients of the service.

The contracts signed between AGEDI and podcasting operators cannot cover the use of music videos.

3| Technical conditions and other requirements that any entity must fulfil to sign a podcasting contract with AGEDI are as follows:

a) Scanning and copying by recipient:

The entity shall use effective technological measures (including those referred to the use of geo-blocking technologies or equivalent accepted at any time by the recording industry), insofar as they are available in the market and can be implemented without an excessive cost, with the purpose of avoiding that:

- (i) recipients of the transmission or any other person or society can scan automatically the operator's transmissions alone or together with other operators' transmissions, with the aim of selecting particular phonograms to be broadcasted to the recipient of the transmission;
- (ii) recipients of the transmission or any other person or organisation can make copies of phonograms. Therefore, no metadata regarding phonograms shall be provided to third parties, nor third parties shall be supported or allowed to recover and/or gather such metadata from transmissions;
- (iii) transmissions are available outside the territory or territories where they have been authorised, and
- (iv) transmissions being retransmitted by the recipients of the transmission or any other person or organisation, by means of links or any other way. However, the operator shall be able to authorise third parties the retransmission of its transmissions, as long as it is simultaneous and unaltered, is made under the original brand or channel and it carried out from the operator's server. In any case, this operation must have the express authorisation of AGEDI.

b) Technological protection measures:

The entity shall assume and not interfere with technological measures used by rights holders to identify and protect phonograms, insofar as they do not cause a perceptible visual or aural degradation in the digital signal and the transmission is technically feasible without imposing excessive costs to the entity.

c) Prohibition of use in advertising and synchronisation:

The entity shall not broadcast in full or in part any phonograms for advertising purposes, either they are their own or third parties', unless expressly authorised. It shall not reproduce in full or in part any phonograms in audiovisual recordings of any type.

d) Information for the management of intellectual property rights:

Subject to terms set in item a):

- (i) the entity shall identify the phonogram during the time it is being transmitted and not before, and the following details shall be shown: title of phonogram, title of the album if appropriate, and featured recording artist, so that the recipient is able to see them on the screen of its reception device;
- (ii) the transmission of the phonogram shall be accompanied, if technically feasible, by the information encoded in it and identify the title of the phonogram, performing artist and other related information.

e) Prohibition to broadcast unlawful phonograms:

The entity shall not broadcast unlawful phonograms, including bootlegs, nor shall broadcast phonograms that are not yet available for broadcasting or transmission in the territory where the entity is established. It shall not re-mix, edit or otherwise modify the phonograms, so that what is broadcast would be different from the original phonogram, so that what is transmitted is different from the original phonogram.

f) Automatic channel switching, skip and pause buttons and customisation of the service:

The entity shall not permit the broadcast's receiver device to switch from one program to another.

The entity shall not incorporate skip, forward or backward buttons (except for a case limited to the recipient being able to pause the transmission or move it forward or backward to a point of the program, at his/her choice and in the time chosen by him/herself) into any part of its service and shall neither include any functionalities that allow the recipients of the service customisations of transmissions or podcasts, such as choosing music genres, choosing artists, choosing albums, voting for songs or voting for artists or albums. The user shall neither go back or forth, nor skip or forward within a program, from one phonogram to another.

g) Moral rights:

The entity shall broadcast phonograms by always respecting the moral rights of authors and artists or performing artists.

The entity shall act with diligence when selecting and using phonograms to not denigrate artistic integrity of any protected work or performance embedded on it, and without treating them disrespectfully. Besides, the operator shall not perform any of the phonograms together with any images that would have any of the described effects or which is illegal or offensive.

The entity shall not include in the service any mention to gambling games, alcoholic drinks, tobacco, pornography, drugs, music piracy, violence, vulgar, irreverent or offensive contents, or to unlawful activities or content.

The foregoing includes, without limitation, intellectual property rights infringement (including file sharing), racism, homophobia, hatred, fraud or infringement of the third parties' rights.

The entity shall be obliged to withdraw from the service any particular phonograms if so was requested by the RIGHTS HOLDER, by means of a notice duly reasoned and communicated by AGEDI to the entity.

h) Security conditions:

The entity shall have to comply with the security conditions and DRM established by AGEDI.

For the avoidance of doubt, transmissions within closed proprietary systems and closed private networks or mobile phone networks likewise are excluded from the scope of this agreement.

- i) only one contract can be signed with a single individual, association or business;
- j) the website signing the contract carries no third party advertising;

- l) linking to tracks is not allowed. The authorised website shall not allow, authorise or promote access to the tracks through other websites or services operated by third parties or the operator itself;
